Executive Director's Message

2021 for CANADEM was very similar to 2020, partly and unfortunately because of the many ongoing humanitarian crises. Fortunately, CANADEM continued to be able to find hundreds of humanitarian and other experts on its roster who were prepared to deploy despite COVID-19. Our staff remained adept at finding ways to quickly deploy those experts despite COVID-19 impediments, and key funders, the UK and Canadian governments and the UN, continued their generous funding.

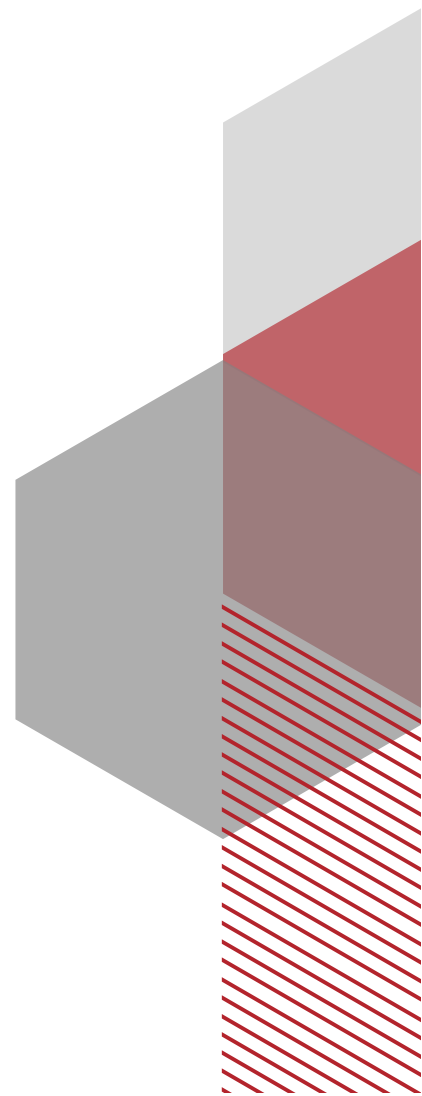

Our annual report provides salient aspects of CANADEM in 2021, but underlying them has been a sense of impending positive change. COVID-19 has encouraged and even forced many around the world to adopt new methodologies, and re-imagine how they might operate going forward. CANADEM has similarly adapted and imagined new ways to carry out and expand its mandate to strengthen the international community generally and Canadian international efforts specifically.

CANADEM's creation was triggered by the Rwandan Genocide of 1995, and Canada's desire to strengthen international rapid response starting with the rostering and then deployment of Canadian experts. Later events caused us to adapt and innovate by rostering tens of thousands of non-Canadians, with a larger intent, strengthening international efforts with the best available experts worldwide.

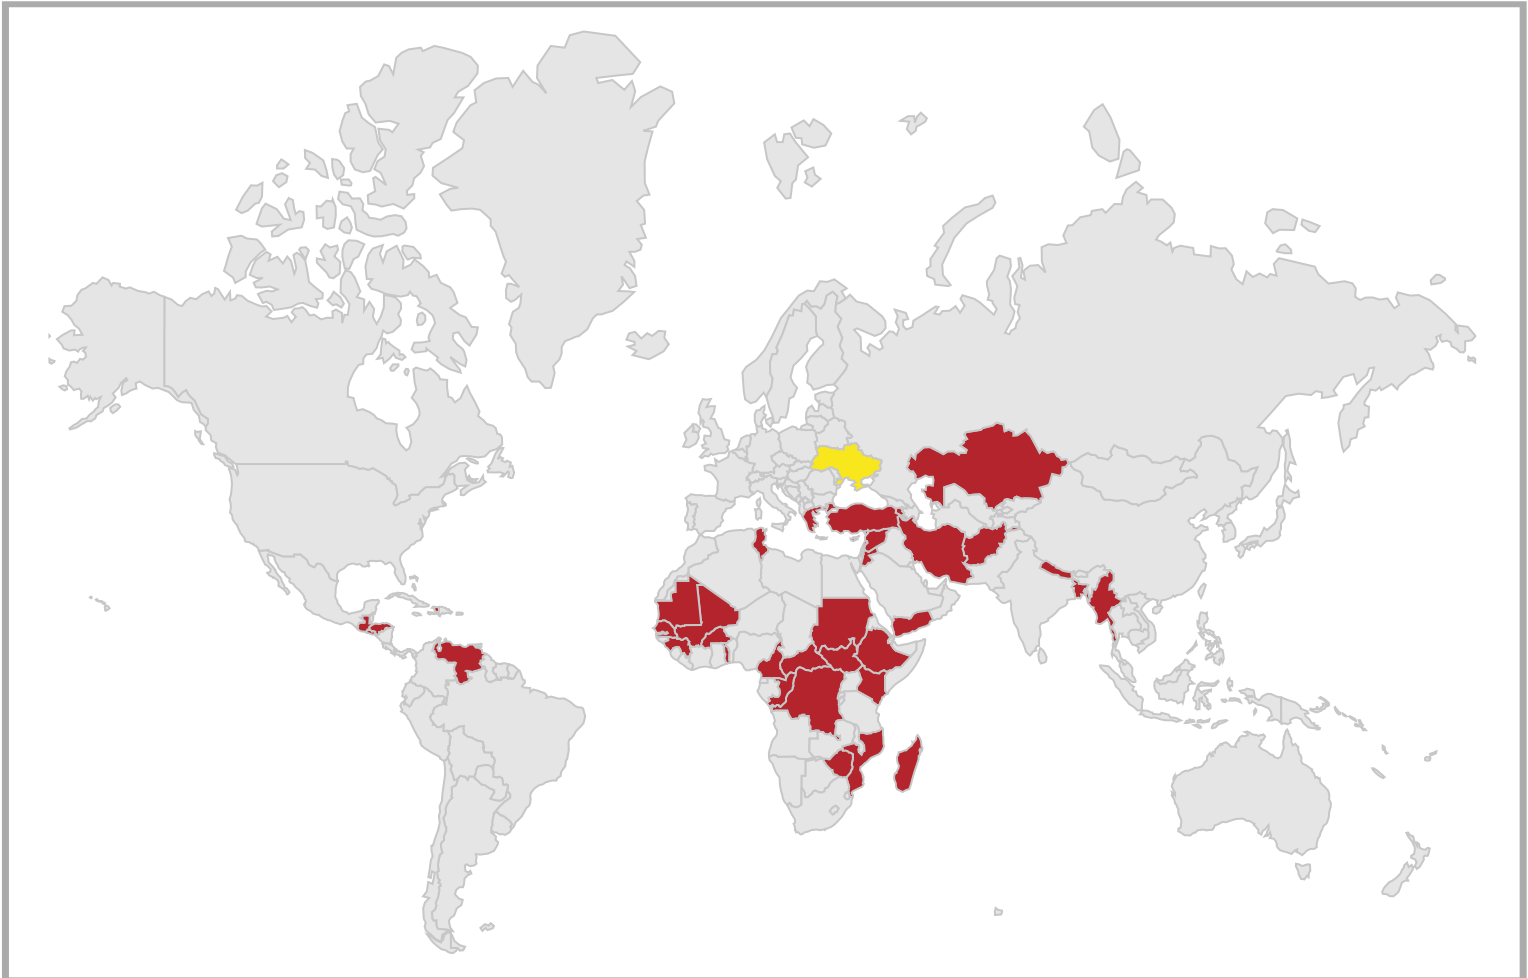

Coming out of the COVID-19 pandemic, Canadian and other governments, as well as international organizations, are intent on re-imagining how best they can respond to crises and resolve longstanding international challenges. Through all of last year, CANADEM was strategizing on how we can play a larger role to assist in achieving those new goals. We are optimistic about 2022 and are looking forward to continuing current partnerships and expanding new ones.

This is down from 39 in 2021, indicating an increased level of international travel and a stronger capacity in CANADEM's flight procurement system.

The most common profile of experts deployed in 2021 was Gender-Based Violence (GBV) and Sexual Reproductive Health (SRH). A significant number of these GBV/SRH experts were deployed to Ethiopia to address the crisis in the Tigray region.

HUMANITARIAN DEPLOYMENTS

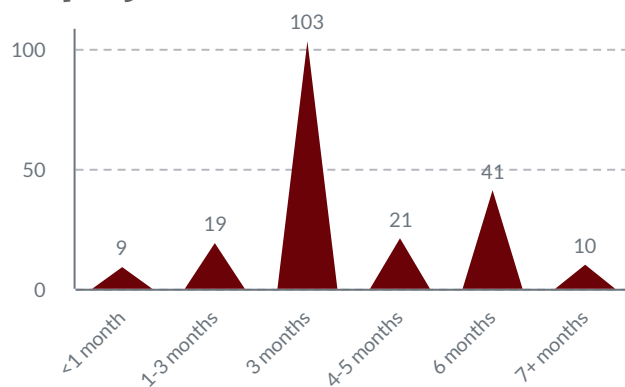

Despite the continuous challenges of the COVID-19 pandemic, CANADEM's deployment of external surge support to UN receiving agencies remained constant in 2021. CANADEM was the second largest provider of experts to the UN through the Standby Partnership in 2021, ensuring experts were available and able to provide their support during rapid-onset humanitarian emergencies and disasters, as well as protracted crises.

Our experts, serving with UN field offices all around the world as "experts on mission", improve the delivery of relief efforts in areas such as gender, child protection, shelter, logistics, etc. to successfully contribute to the well-being of local and displaced vulnerable populations.

Our deployment unit continued to provide support to deployed experts by providing duty of care, assistance with specific entry/exit and transit requirements, quarantine information, etc.

In 2021, CANADEM was chosen to support the Global Shelter Cluster with the deployments of the Global Focal Point for Advocacy (funded by BHA-USAID) and the Global Focal Point for Environment (funded by ECHO) to UNHCR.
